Using Moodle in Higher Education

The last two years have changed the way education is imparted to the learners. Online and blended modes of learning have gained tremendous momentum all over the world. Academicians are looking for a common and robust platform to disseminate content to and monitor the progress of their learners. Online Learning is one of the effective ways for providing quality education over the Internet. Online activities include providing learning resources, conducting collaborative learning activities, arranging continuous and comprehensive assessment, managing data and generating reports.

'Moodle Learning Management System' provides a very systematic environment for these activities in online as well as blended learning environments. It provides a variety of Activities and Resources to create Courses and make the teaching, learning and monitoring processes organised and meaningful. Learners can access their Course according to their convenience, exchange ideas and thoughts using the forums. Moodle also supports a plethora of file types and formats that can be added as learning resources. Learners can upload their assignments and the grading feature can be used to assess their performance. Different types of surveys help understand the learners' social and academic progress during the course.

Moodle, therefore, functions as a single-point gateway to the world of learning for both instructors and learners. Moodle supports teachers to function beyond lecturing!

This FDP will introduce you to the features of Moodle 4.0 and help you build Courses to create rich learning environments for your learners.

We invite you to Engage-Experience-Empower yourself by participating in this National Online FDP and explore the Moodle 4.0 Learning Management System.
